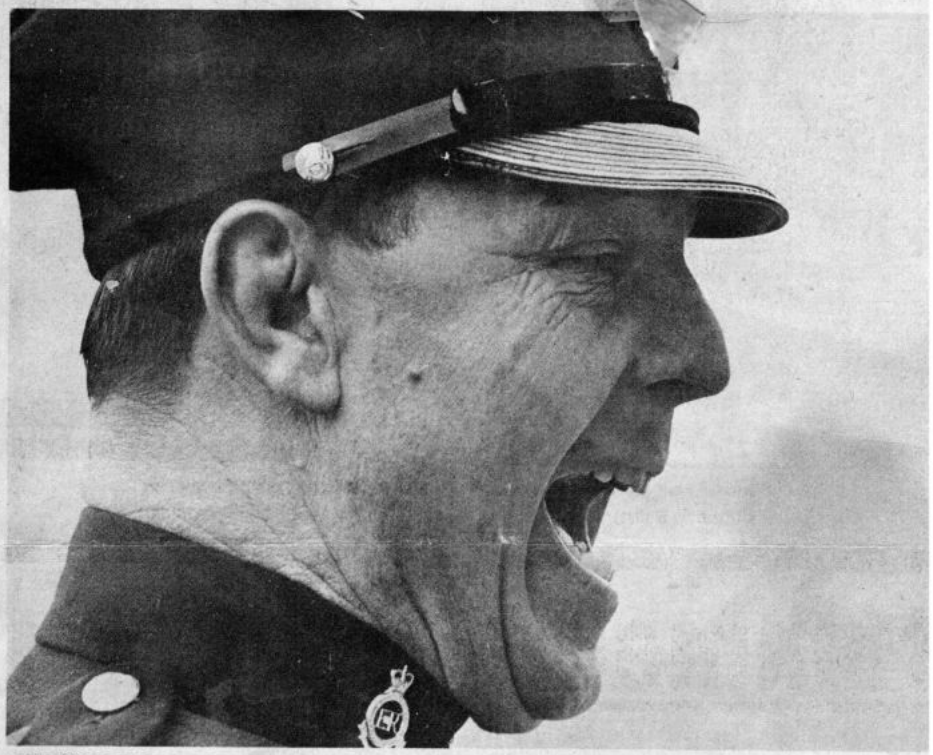
The roar and The smile



ONE FULL-THROATED ROAR (Army issue) as heard at Sandhurst.

ONE STIFF UPPER LIP (parade style) while in the course of asjusting cadet's hat.

The voice that can flatten a recruit is retiring

By John Peacock

BERKSHIRE Sgt-Major Cyril Phillips has made 6,000 Army officers knock at the knees.

He has bawled out princes and sheiks, had a king and a sultan trembling in their boots and has commanded respect from a former Minister for the Army who used to call him "Sir."

He is known to most members of the royal family and he plays golf with generals. His war exploits are an embarrassment to the Germans.

Tomorrow Sgt-Major "Phil" Phillips leaves "the finest job in the British Army." A job for which he refused a commission.

BELIEVER IN LOUD WORDS

After 36 years' service he retires as the Sandhurst Academy Sgt-Major, the Army's most senior NCO.

He will be on parade for the last time as another contingent of officer-cadets he has been responsible for training pass out under his eagle eye at the Sovereign's Parade.

He is the very model of a modern Sgt-Major: Six feet, two inches tall, a 14-stone plus former Army rugby player, of the ramrod straight back, wide shoulders and a chest which harbours the finest pair of lungs in the business. His voice is said to be enough to flatten a new recruit at 10 paces.

He believes in achieving results by personal example. He abhors bad language but is a firm believer in loud words of command.

Sgt-Major Phillips, aged 55, toned down That Voice yesterday to talk of his Army experiences and his feelings on leaving.

He said: "It will be a very sad day, but the blow will be softened as I am going to be superintendent at St James's Palace. I will be living there, and I will be Sgt-Major of the Queen's bodyguard.

"I have no regrets about not taking a commission, I prefer this type of life."

He recalled that during the war his unit was overrun by the Germans as they fought a rearguard action at Dunkirk.

He spent five years in POW camps and was among a group of British soldiers who refused to labour for the Germans.

"We were the first of about 20,000 or 30,000 soldiers who refused to help the German war effort."

He was banished to an underground prison in east Prussion where the POWs were exposed to constant threats.

Near the end of the war he and seven men took over their POW camp in Bavaria from the dreaded SS and Hungarian Guards. Then he formed a platoon and joined the Americans in a battle against diehard SS fanatics.

It was during his prisoner of war days that he met another POW, a Sgt Fred Mulley, who was later to become deputy defence secretary and Minister for the Army.

BROWN STEW AND DRIPPING

Sgt Major Phillips said: "I was a colour-sergeant then and he used to call me 'Sir.' But of course the positions were soon changed and when I have met him since I have called him 'Sir'."

Mr Phillips, as he will be known from tomorrow, joined the Welsh Guards in 1934 when he was 18 and trained on a diet of "brown stew, bread and dripping and onions."

He was appointed Academy Sgt-Major in 1963 and he is only the second person to hold the title.

He is married with two daughters and a son and lives in Oak Grove View, RMA Sandurst.

ONE BROAD SMILE (for the use of) just to show that ASMs really have a heart of gold.
